To whom it may concern:

Jenn Johnson has been teaching online writing classes for me since January, 2010. As an instructor working with children from the age of nine through the age of 17, she has proven herself to be a hard-working, dependable, strong teacher. The nature of the classes is such that she is constantly working under pressure and strict deadlines. Although the class is conducted online, Jenn has formed strong bonds with the children and parents, communicating with all of them in order to assist their growth in writing. In some cases, the children with whom she has worked have had some type of learning disorder, and she has modified lessons and methods in order to help the student be successful. On the other hand, in many cases, children have needed to be challenged beyond the basic instruction as laid out in the lessons. Jenn provides assistance and ideas to help these children grow beyond their current level.

However, it is not only with children that Jenn has proven her worth. She has provided input and ideas for changes, and is always willing to go beyond the basic requirements. In addition, she has written the curriculum for two courses for our program, and the classes have received enthusiastic response from the participants. I have turned to her for input and value her experience and ideas. I would highly recommend Jenn for a teaching position with any age group, and if a leadership role is required, anyone would be lucky to have Jenn on his or her team.

Please contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Eileen Heath
